

DESIGN WORKING DOCUMENT

CYA & WS Website Rebuild

Wireframes and mock-ups

Low-fidelity wireframes for the priority (MVP) pages identified in the Developer Brief, with two layout options per page, a pros/cons comparison, and a recommended direction with the reasoning behind it. This document is a companion to the Developer Brief and the strategic report; it does not repeat their content, only translates the relevant pages into layout.

Prepared for Glenn Hammond

Covers corporateyoga.com.au and wellbeingstudio.com.au

Source CYA and WS Website Rebuild Developer Brief

How to read this document

Each page below shows two structurally different layout options, not two colour variations of the same layout. Wireframes are deliberately low-fidelity: grey boxes stand in for content and imagery so the layout decision can be judged on its own, before visual design is applied. Once a direction is agreed per page, the shared visual design system (Section 9.2 of the Developer Brief: colour, type, component library) is applied consistently across both domains.

☐ Structural note ☐ Primary call to action / cross-link ☐ Depends on a fix required elsewhere in the brief

Six pages are covered here: the pages the Developer Brief marks MVP and where the layout decision materially affects the credibility and conversion problems the brief documents. About, Case studies, Blog and the legal pages are more standard patterns and are not wireframed separately here; they can follow the component library established by these six once it is agreed.

CLIENT LOGO STRIP (unverified logos NOT migrated - see 8.1)

PROOF / TESTIMONIAL STRIP

PROS

- Gets visitors to the service offer fast, a familiar high-converting pattern
- Shorter path from landing to enquiry for warm or returning visitors
- Simple to build and test first

CONS

- Leads with claims before proof, which is a risk for a considered B2B purchase
- Does nothing to counter the specific credibility problems this brief documents (Section 2.1: mismatched logos, unverifiable clients)

Option B - Trust first

Personalised Programs

PROS

- Puts accreditation, insurance and audited client proof ahead of the pitch, directly answering the skepticism an HR buyer brings to an unfamiliar wellbeing vendor
- Plays to CYA's actual strength: a decade-plus track record, which a newer competitor cannot claim
- Still keeps the primary CTA in the hero, so nothing is lost on conversion speed

CONS

- Services themselves sit further down the page
- Only works once the Section 8.1 logo and testimonial audit is complete; an unpopulated trust strip would undercut the entire point

RECOMMENDED: OPTION B, TRUST-LED SEQUENCING

CYA is competing against newer, better-resourced entrants (see the accompanying strategic report). Its one durable advantage is a decade-plus history and real client relationships, and the current site actively undermines that advantage with mismatched logos and unverifiable claims. Leading with verified proof turns a weakness into a strength, provided the Section 8.1 audit is completed before this design is built, not after.

corporateyoga.com.au - Services overview

Job of the page: replace the current broken /services redirect with a genuine summary that routes to service detail pages (Brief Section 2.1, Section 4).

PAGE HEADER - replaces broken /services redirect

SERVICE CARD GRID (uniform format, links to detail pages)

SINGLE FAQ COMPONENT (deduplicated, referenced not repeated)

PROS

- Fast to scan; a time-poor HR buyer can see the full service range in one view
- Directly fixes the brief's stated fault: this page exists purely to replace a broken redirect and route people onward
- Uniform card format is cheap to maintain as a CMS content type and easy to extend

CONS

- Doesn't sell any one service in depth
- Relies on the detail pages to carry the persuasive weight

Option B - Editorial / storytelling

OPTION B

PROS

• More persuasive per service, useful where a buyer needs convincing before clicking through

• Better showcase for photography and programme depth

CONS

• Slower to scan, works against this page's actual job

• Duplicates the depth that the individual service detail pages should own

• Longer page to build and keep current

RECOMMENDED: OPTION A, CARD GRID

This page has one job: routing. It is not the place to persuade, that work belongs to the service detail pages and the About page's trust content. Keep it a fast, scannable index.

corporateyoga.com.au - Packages / Pricing (new page)

Job of the page: give at least indicative entry-level pricing, with larger tiers as a custom quote (Brief Section 4, Section 4.1, strategic report Section 12.9).

Option A - Tiered comparison table

STRUCTURED CONTENT NOTE - tiers/prices editable without code change (4.1)

Brand	Explore	Trust badges	Legal

PROS

- Publishing any pricing at all directly fixes a documented gap (Section 2.1: "no pricing anywhere")
- Feature-by-feature comparison suits a procurement-style buyer who is comparing CYA against alternatives
- The strategic report frames pricing transparency as a real point of difference from Kinex Health; a comparison table makes that difference visible, not just implied

CONS

- More rows to keep accurate and current
- Needs disciplined structured content (name, price, inclusions, CTA) so non-developers can update it, as the brief specifies in Section 4.1

PROS

Simpler to build and maintain

Softer, less procurement-flavoured tone

CONS

Loses the side-by-side comparison that a genuine differentiator (transparent pricing) is meant to demonstrate

Weaker for buyers actively comparing vendors

RECOMMENDED: OPTION A, TIERED TABLE

Given the brief and the strategic report both treat pricing transparency as a deliberate point of difference, the design should make that difference visible rather than just technically present. Build the price points as structured content from day one so this stays a content update, never a code change.

PROS

- Matches what actually exists at MVP: a B2B offer only, individual signup is Phase 3 (Brief Section 5, Section 10)
- One clear path, one clear CTA, nothing half-built to maintain
- The waitlist link captures individual interest without promising a product that isn't live

CONS

- Individual visitors get a secondary link rather than a dedicated path
- Will need revisiting once the B2C tier ships in Phase 3

Option B - Two-path split

INSTRUCTORS + TESTIMONIALS (combined strip)

PROS

- Clarifies audience immediately, which will matter once both paths are genuinely live

CONS

- Builds a full "for individuals" path for a product that does not exist yet at MVP, extra design and QA effort for something that currently dead-ends
- Risks looking unfinished or misleading if the individual path visibly leads nowhere

RECOMMENDED: OPTION A, SINGLE B2B PATH FOR MVP

Design for what ships, not what's planned. A two-path split is the right design once the individual tier exists in Phase 3; building it now means shipping a path that leads nowhere, which is worse for trust than not offering it at all.

CASE STUDY OR TESTIMONIAL

PROS

- Mirrors the proven pattern the brief explicitly asks WS to emulate: a dedicated, conversion-focused funnel page similar to Kinex Health's approach
- Well suited to paid traffic and cold visitors who arrive with no context
- Repeated CTAs at natural decision points (after proof, after FAQ) without forcing navigation choices

CONS

- Longer page, more scrolling for a warm visitor who already knows what they want

PROS

Faster for a warm, self-directed visitor to jump straight to what they need (e.g. pricing)

Working against a cold-traffic funnel's actual purpose, which is to carry a sceptical visitor through a sequence, not let them skip it

Extra interaction/state complexity on what should be a lightweight marketing page

CONS

RECOMMENDED: OPTION A, LINEAR SCROLL

This page's entire purpose is conversion from cold or lightly-warmed traffic. A linear, story-led scroll with CTAs repeated at the points where objections would naturally arise (proof, comparison, FAQ) does that job better than letting a first-time visitor self-navigate.

PROS

- Scales well as content, reporting and the Phase 3 company admin view are added
- Familiar SaaS pattern for anyone used to a membership platform

CONS

- More chrome than most members need for what the brief describes as a simple weekly habit: join a session, browse the library
- Heavier to build for an MVP that is explicitly scoped as Phase 2/3 (Brief Section 7, Section 10)

Option B - Tile dashboard

MY PARTICIPATION - small summary strip only

attendance summary

No persistent sidebar - lighter chrome for a quick check-in visit

PROS

- Matches the actual MVP use case: a member checking in to join today's session or browse a small library, not managing a complex account
- Lighter to design and build first, which suits the phased plan in Section 10
- Big, obvious tiles reduce friction for infrequent or first-time members

CONS

- Will need a sidebar or richer navigation once participation history and, later, the company admin view are added in Phase 3

RECOMMENDED: OPTION B FOR MVP, WITH A MIGRATION PATH TO OPTION A

Build the lighter tile dashboard first, since that matches what Phase 2/3 actually needs to ship. Structure the underlying navigation so a sidebar (Option A) can be introduced later without a rebuild, once participation reporting and the company admin view (Phase 3) are added.

Summary of recommendations

CYA Home	Option B, trust first	Counters the credibility problems documented in the audit before making the pitch
CYA Services overview	Option A, card grid	The page's only job is routing, not persuasion

CYA Packages/Pricing	Option A, comparison table	Makes the pricing-transparency differentiator visible, not just present
WS Home	Option A, single B2B path	Matches what actually ships at MVP; no live individual tier yet
WS For companies	Option A, linear scroll funnel	Matches the brief's own reference pattern (Kinex's dedicated funnel page)
WS Member portal	Option B, tile dashboard	Matches the actual MVP use case; sidebar can follow once Phase 3 needs it

Before this goes to visual design

1. Confirm the six recommended directions above, or flag which ones you'd like reversed or blended before any high-fidelity design work starts.
2. The CYA Home and About trust-first sequencing only works once the Section 8.1 logo and testimonial audit is complete. That audit should be scheduled ahead of visual design, not run in parallel with it.
3. The WS Home and Member portal recommendations assume the phased build plan in Section 10 (B2C and full reporting arrive in Phase 3). If the timeline changes, those two pages are worth revisiting.
4. Once directions are confirmed, the next step is the shared visual design system (colour, type, component library, Section 9.2) applied across both domains, followed by high-fidelity mock-ups of these same six pages.

This document should be read alongside the CYA and WS Website Rebuild Developer Brief. Where a recommendation here depends on a decision the brief flags as open (Section 12), that dependency is noted against the relevant page above.
